the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion (United Nations, 1994).

There are a number of reasons why the number of children in the world is increasing. One of the main reasons is that the number of children who are surviving to the age of 15 is increasing. This is due to a number of factors, including improved medical care, better nutrition, and a decline in child mortality rates.

Another reason why the number of children in the world is increasing is that the number of children who are being born is increasing. This is due to a number of factors, including a decline in the age at which women are having children and a decline in the number of children who are being abandoned.

The number of children in the world is increasing at a rapid rate. This is a cause for concern because it means that there will be a large number of children who will need to be supported in the future. This is a challenge for governments and the international community.

There are a number of ways in which the number of children in the world can be reduced. One way is to improve the health care of women and children. This will help to reduce the number of children who are dying in infancy.

Another way is to improve the nutrition of women and children. This will help to reduce the number of children who are malnourished and who are at risk of dying.

A third way is to reduce the number of children who are being born. This can be done by providing women with access to family planning services.

It is important to take action now to reduce the number of children in the world. This will help to ensure that there are enough resources to support the children who are already in the world.
